ther wrongs multiplies

ir evil consequences. The pub-ry, which should only exist as a onvenient agency for collecting the people's tribute nd disbursing it for the benefit of the people, becomes a means of unnecessarily withdrawing from trade and the use, thus crippling our national energies, hindering our country's development, preventing investment in productive enterprises, threatening financial disaster, and inviting schemes of public plunder.

This condition of our treasury does not now, and it never did, arise from any actual necessity for the money exacted for the support of the government. During the last fiscal year, under the operation of the present tariff laws, the receipts have been so large that, notwithstanding the remission of taxes by the act of May 1, 1886, and the additional relief afforded by the refunding act of August 7, 1886, there remained in the Treasury at the close of the year $55,438,021.33 in excess of all the expenditures for the year, including the sum of $15,000,000 contributed to the sinking fund. During the previous fiscal year, ended June 30, 1887, the receipts were still larger by $37,984,100, or such surplus had been applied to the payment of the principal of the 4 per cent bonds which were then redeemable at the option of the government, the embarrassing condition of financial affairs among the people still needing relief immediately after the 30th day of June, the remainder of the three hundred and fifty-odd millions of dollars of bonds then outstanding, amounting in principal and interest to the sum of $1,815,238 would have been called in and paid, and the sinking fund contribution for the present fiscal year, $60,000,000, would have been saved to the people. Not only can no such expenditures of the public moneys for the benefit of the people be made under present conditions, but the collection of the annual taxes levied by the present tariff laws will unquestionably add many millions of dollars more than can be used economically in the administration of the government to the sum already in the Treasury unless the present tariff laws are changed.

The collection of moneys needlessly exacted for the support of the government, thereby depriving the people of the use of their circulating medium, is not the only obnoxious incident of the present tariff laws. The exaction from the consumer of the duties imposed upon imported articles is sometimes so concealed in the price of the commodity that he pays the tax without knowing it. In many cases the duties imposed upon articles entering into the composition of manufactured products are so numerous and complicated that the consumer is unable to estimate the burden he bears. Many of the taxed articles of universal use, such as tea, coffee, and the finer grades of woolen clothing, are not produced to any appreciable extent in this country, and the duties collected upon them are paid into the Treasury directly by the importer. The amount paid by him is, however, recouped from the consumer, who thus contributes to the support of the government in proportion to the extent of his consumption of articles subject to duty. The presumption is that he bears his share of the burden of taxation in accordance with the value of his property, and that he is content to pay his proportion of the public revenue in return for the protection afforded him by the government. But he is entitled to complain of any system which adds to the cost of his support more than is necessary for the needful requirements of the public service, and he insists that the exactions from him shall be limited to the actual needs of the government, economically administered.

Our present tariff laws are the result of frequent revisions of the law. Beginning with the act of August 5, 1861, which was passed solely for the purpose of providing additional revenue to carry on the war, our tariff system has been subjected to repeated modifications, until the customs-revenue laws fill a volume of considerable size. Many of the changes have been made at long intervals, and treat of the rates upon a single article or group of articles, leaving the schedules as a whole unrevised. Meanwhile, manufacturing processes have been revolutionized, and certain branches of industry have been built up under the stimulating influence of high duties. Some of these industries have reached a degree of development that enables them to bear a reduction of the rates which were originally imposed upon their products, while others have become so firmly established that they can fairly ask to have the burden of duties shifted from their backs to those of the consumers. All of these facts call for a treatment of the tariff budget in detail, which can only be accomplished by a careful examination of each schedule in connection with the whole system. Such a revision would involve a patient investigation of the operation of the present laws, and a knowledge of the practical effect of the various changes in rates which have been made from time to time. Unless this revision is undertaken by the present congress, it is quite certain that the next house of representatives will be overwhelmed with demands for tariff changes, and that the session of congress following the presidential election will be largely occupied with the consideration of such measures. The construction of the present tariff laws has been the work of congress, and the responsibility for their revision should not be evaded. The subject is clearly within the province of congress, and the interests involved demand that it should be treated in a spirit free from partisan bias, remembering that the burden of taxation, however it may be adjusted, must rest upon the consumers of the country.

The surplus in the Treasury is not the only consequence of present tariff laws which demands consideration. The collection of moneys not required to defray the necessary expenses of the government, and the withdrawal of large sums from the channels of trade to be locked up in the Treasury, are productive of other mischiefs to the business of the country. Aside from the obvious fact that the money thus withdrawn from circulation checks the activity of labor and threatens the prosperity of the people, it has a direct tendency to produce a plethoric condition of the public revenues. Our revenue laws should provide only for such moderate surplus as may be required to supply deficiencies caused by the variation between estimates and actual receipts, and for the payment of such balances as may be certified by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to be due upon the settlement of public accounts. Expenditures should be so adjusted to the revenues that large balances will not lie idle in the Treasury, awaiting the conclusion of the fiscal year. The fact that our revenues have been in excess of the needful requirements of the government for several years is due to the neglect of congress to readjust the revenue laws in accordance with the changed conditions which time has brought about. Relief from the unnecessary burdens resting upon the industries and labor of the country should be granted at the earliest practicable moment. The failure of the present congress to accomplish this work will be justly visited upon the party responsible for the neglect.

The existence of a large surplus in the Treasury subject to the call of congress is a temptation to extravagant appropriations. Suggestions as to the needful expenditure of moneys in the Treasury are sometimes received with favor which would promptly be followed by requisitions for their withdrawal. The simple plan of reducing the revenues to the needful requirements of the government by the reduction of the present tariff taxes is the only one which will commend itself to the thoughtful consideration of the people and their representatives. Any other plan must be experimental, and will be subject to the objection that it offers a bounty for the collection of unnecessary revenues.

The message of the president is a remarkable document. By general consent the president in confining himself to the subject in a message at the beginning of a session of congress. President Cleveland in his inaugural message confined himself to a discussion of the issues between the north and south. But this is not at a time when the country is only this session was delivered to the ...ress and not to the congress. Without exception presidents have especially referred our foreign relations with the rest of mankind. But President Cleveland has made a departure. If it is to be commended. Last evening there was an impromptu meeting of the Colorado Springs fire department, [illegible] of which the present efficient chief of the department was entirely ignorant. The various hose companies of the city met in their respective rooms and proceeded to the city hall where the Firemen's band, of which Mr. Perrin is a member, was rehearsing. The firemen marched in a body into the hall greatly to the surprise of the chief, who did not understand the purpose of the gathering. After the band had played a selection, Fire [illegible] Chief H. Commandeur took the platform and appointed the following committee to escort Mr. Perrin to a place in front of the speaker's stand: J. F. Pearce of the W. S. Jackson company, J. M. Bolton of the Matt France, John Simmons of the Hook and Ladder company, W. E. Johnson of the B. F. Crowell and Fred Sherwin of the College Hose No. 4. After the committee had performed the duty assigned them, the first assistant chief in a few brief remarks presented Mr. Perrin with a magnificent gold badge emblematic of the position which he holds in the department. Mr. Perrin though completely taken by surprise was equal to the emergency, and replied to the presentation speech in a very feeling manner. He stated that he was utterly at a loss for words with which to express his thanks, but he could only say from the bottom of his heart that he thanked the boys one and all for [illegible] After a brief season of social intercourse, varied with musical selections by the band, the meeting adjourned. The occasion was one of pleasure throughout and will always be remembered as one of the most happy [illegible] that the department has ever held. The badge which was given to Mr. Perrin is a beautiful [illegible] of the jeweler's and engraver's art. It is of solid gold, with a magnificent and appropriate design. The emblem is surmounted with an eagle with outstretched wings. The entire [illegible] is suspended from the [illegible] which are the words "Presented to C. B. Perrin, Chief of the Colorado Springs fire department." Upon the face of the badge are representations of the chief's silver trumpet neatly worked in gold.
